Among the problems that younger students have when doing homework, there are unconditional "leaders" in terms of mass and prevalence. But you can overcome them if you know the right solutions! Let's take a look at the different options. So...

Parental pain - lack of independence of the child

He doesn't sit down to do his homework. Possible reasons are laziness, disorganization. Only the regime will help in the fight against them.

It is better to sit down for lessons at the same time. Organize a comfortable workplace. At first, sit nearby, but do not help or suggest answers. Right now, you must firmly stop all the children's "I want" - "I want to drink" (for the tenth time!), "I want an apple" and so on - explaining that you should first do what you need to do. You need to answer something like this: "If you finish it, there will be an apple and a drink." Teach your child to do this and be consistent.

You can set a timer, an alarm clock, the signal of which will sound at the same time and mean that it's time to sit down for lessons. Such a mechanical signal helps parents a lot, removing "guilt" from them. This is not a beloved mother who makes you work, leaving toys, but something mechanical. After two or three months, the child will develop the habit of doing homework at a certain time, and the regime will not cause negative emotions in him. There should be a positive atmosphere in the house: "Work is interesting! I love my job! It's boring without work! From you, parents, only positive emotions should come: "What did you ask? Class! You can test yourself! What an interesting challenge! Are you already solving such complex examples? What a golden child we have! How lucky we are!"

Consider when your child does homework.

Your kid almost always sits down for lessons no earlier than six or seven in the evening (he has a lot of sections or he is waiting for his mother from work). Urgently change the schedule of sections and reduce the load. After 6 pm, a child and homework are almost incompatible phenomena.

He studies on the second shift and does his homework in the morning, no one controls him, since his parents are at work at this time? This is the most difficult case. Let the child try to do oral tasks himself. Go to bed early, get up at 6 am, and do your written homework until 7:30 am. Also take time to study on weekends: study for 3-4 hours.

Makes a lot of mistakes? There are knowledge gaps! First, contact the teacher and follow his recommendations step by step. If he does not want or cannot help you, solve the problem yourself. Try to figure it out yourself or hire a tutor. Don't expect or demand quick results. Learn to see all the micro-victories of the child and rejoice with him. All people have different perceptions. Yes, it is enough for someone to explain it once, but for someone it is necessary to repeat it 300 times. Be patient.
